The Benefits of Offering Financial Education at Work

Financial planning involves making several long-term decisions that affect major financial events.

Surveys show one in four workers suffer from serious financial distress commonly attributed to the planning and execution of financial strategies.

As financial stress continues to negatively impact and distract employees, many employers are finding financial education in the workplace may be the solution.

Financial wellness is influenced by several factors including personal characteristics, knowledge of financial concepts, spending and saving habits, and unexpected financial situations.

The Financial Wellness site serves as an educational resource providing tools and unbiased information to help your employees gain control of their financial wellness journey.

Complete with calculators, videos, and informative content, resources are provided to assist individuals seeking guidance on a range of long-term planning topics.

The site is available at no cost to employers for direct access on their employee portal.
